THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1913.

An Evening Echo.

An editor of a daily paper should express the principles of the paper he represents and not his own opinions and prejudices; for a newspaper should echo the voice of the people and ignore the personal plagues of its editor.—JAMES ELI.

A halt has been called on the publication of robbery tales, doubtless for the purpose of letting an amateur or two get dry behind the ears and sprout a few more wisps of face fuzz.

The Sistersville Review is now setting its editorial matter in smaller type, which is much sanded and more appropriate for a daily newspaper than the screaming poster-like letters it formerly used.

Some of the progressive business men of Clarksburg should get busy and promote the building of a railroad from this city to Fairmont to connect with the Buckhannon and Northern railroad there. The possibilities of a competitive railroad line into this city fairly stagger the imagination.

Belated returns to the United States Geological Survey show that the total production of natural gas in West Virginia in 1912 was 239,088,068 cubic feet, valued at $33,349,021, and in Pennsylvania 112,149,555,000 cubic feet, valued at $18,529,672. This gives West Virginia an additional lead of $4,000,000 in value over figures recently issued by the survey.

Menace Gives Own Warning.

There is wisdom in taking one stitch in time to save nine. This applies to the Glen Elk bridge, a portion of which fell Wednesday night, but most fortunately without loss of life or injury to any one.

The warning came in harmless form. The fall of beams vindicated what the Telegram has declared from time to time and now impresses the public mind with the good, common sense editorials the Telegram recently contained urging the levying powers to provide for a sum sufficient to rebuild the bridge or rather supplant the present structure with a concrete bridge. The authorities failed to meet the condition. There was general approval of the Telegram's suggestions but no definite support. Business men did not appear before either the county court or the city council and urge action. There was sufficient seriousness to justify public mass meetings but none was held. But enough with the past. The present is with us. What are we going to do?

Temporary repairs may be made but that will not be of a satisfactory answer. There must be a new bridge there and it must be built as soon as it is possible to do so. Temporary repair only leaves the bridge a menace to human life such as the Telegram has frequently pronounced it.

The menace must be overcome. It must not be allowed to continue through indefinite knowledge of those whose duty it is to erect a new bridge, safe and sufficient.

From the Height of Years.

Naturally it would seem as each year passes that which would benefit by the experiences which it brings us, and while many persons do avail themselves of these opportunities in such a way as to materially broaden their conception of life, say the Charleston News and Observer, it is true also that there are many others who, either through ignorance or indifference, fail to learn the lesson of the years.

The lowlands of youth are pleasant places in which to dream away the days in indolence and unconcern, but, after a while, we pass over them into more undulating ground and naturally we find the way a little harder and the outlook somewhat different. Almost unconsciously we begin to look around for the easier way by which to progress.

Up to that time we were willing to drift along, as it were, secure in the knowledge that there was little or nothing about which to concern ourselves.

Making our way by degrees across the undulating plains we come gradually to the foothills of life which stretch out before us until they are nearly lost to view in the distant blue of the heights beyond. We begin now to realize something of the stupendous meaning of the existence we regarded with such slight concern before, we acknowledge to ourselves at last that we have passed far beyond the monotonously satisfying lowlands and that from now on our journey must be carried on in face of obstacles, the surmounting of which will probably bring us face to face with new conditions and new experiences.

Home Garden Economies.

One of the greatest curses of American civilization today is the fact that it is unfashionable to save and that the people are ashamed to save; while extravagance, waste and carelessness are looked upon as smart and signs of prosperity. Now probably this can in no other way be more distinctly shown than by the fact that our wives are not doing the preserving and pickling that our mothers used to do.—Roger W. Babson.

The truth of the statement made by the well known economist, quoted above is borne out by the fact that great manufacturing firms producing pickles, canned goods, soups, etc., have thrived enormously during the last ten years. These great factories with their many varieties of products are thriving on the laziness and unproductiveness of our wives and sisters. They could not have existed in the days of our mothers, who insisted on doing their own preserving and making their pickles; but our wives and children are too lazy to do these things and our maids do not know enough. Therefore, in attempting to solve this increased cost of living problem by means of the family garden, we not only must produce more, but we must save more; not only raise more vegetables but save more vegetables for winter use.

It is doubtful if an averaged sized kitchen garden can be made to pay unless the householder himself does most of the work in it. If you are under constant expense for labor the chances are that your garden will not show a profit.

But if you are living where you can have a garden and are so situated that members of your own family can do most of the work in it, you will find it a genuine means of economy for you, even as thousands and thousands of others have found by experience.

Plant your garden so that you will not only have plenty of fresh vegetables during the summer, but also that you will have an ample supply of winter vegetables and plenty of stuff for preserving—such as tomatoes, which are easy to cultivate and very valuable as food.

Entirely aside from the actual profits of saving from a garden, you must reckon as an important asset the health and satisfaction that it gives.

Good Roads Prevent Disease.

Few persons, on first thought, would see any possible connection between good roads and good health. Yet the State Board of Health of Kansas says that good roads can and will prevent disease. How? By the removal of weeds and trash.

Weeds and trash prevent the prompt retention of ground water. This makes ideal breeding spots for mosquitoes, flies and other insects, which are known as disease carriers. Not to mention chinch bugs, hoppers and other insects which are crop destroyers. Furthermore, an undergrowth of weeds invites the dumping of garbage and manure by offering concealment, of which fact careless and thoughtless people are prone to take advantage, thus increasing the facility of insect breeding and providing these insect carriers with proper material for disease transmission.

Good roads also prevent disease by providing good drainage. Many farms have no means of drainage except by ditches along roadways. Open ditches, clear of brush and debris, with hardened surface and proper fall, afford these farms the opportunity of ridding themselves of many a stagnant pool. The removal of weeds, proper road grading, surface hardening and oiling insure prompt drainage of all pool, ditch and surface water, removing the possibility of insect breeders, for none can multiply without moisture.

Road oiling in itself is destructive of insect larvae, especially mosquitoes—a well known fact.

Dry roads offer pedestrians, and notably children, who are compelled to walk to and from school, dry shoes and feet. While colds are due to specific germs, yet it is a well known fact that cold, wet feet and chilled limbs lower the resistance of individuals and make them more favorable subjects for infections of the respiratory passages, including pneumonia and tuberculosis.

Good roads prevent disease by setting an example to adjoining farm premises. Good roads promote travel and set an example to the farmer whose premises are bordered by them. The comparison of a well-graded, clean highway with an unkempt and trashy barnyard adjoining is sufficient to stimulate every landowner to a clean-up. Pride compels him to offer to passers-by a neat appearing and attractive house and barnyard. Results are only too obvious. Good roads are active disease prevention agencies, aside from their financial and commercial value.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

The Matter with Sulzer. Some was, evidently a baseball fan, suggests that Sulzer had speed, but no control.—Huntington Herald-Dispatch.

What You Make It. Your luck, despite the astrologers, witches, necromancers and other members of that tribe of impostors, is just what you make it.—Sistersville Review.

Prepared. After living by a river of sulphur all his life, Pa Wheeling need have no fear of that sulphur lake which is said to be waiting for him in the future.—Wheeling News.

Get Busy. Young man, have you a position, by which you earn an honest living? If so, get next to that job of yours and you will already be practically engaged to the proprietor's daughter. Blessed is the man who invented work!—Charleston Gazette.

Need Not. Henry Lane Wilson need not have written. Everybody knew before he took his pen in hand he was in sympathy with the government of blood, assassination, treachery and thieving in Mexico. Let him go down and weep on the bosom of old Huerta.—State Journal, Parkersburg.

Due Regard. Martin Glynn on assuming the governorship of New York said he had no inspirations to become the leader of the Democratic party in the state. "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib," Glynn has due regard to the prerogative of Boss Murphy.—Bluefield Telegraph.

Beware the After Effects. Parents of children having diphtheria should watch them carefully for some weeks after they have apparently recovered. After effects, more serious than the disease itself, frequently develop by letting a child return to its ordinary daily routine before the period of convalescence has expired.—Parkersburg Sentinel.

Lucrative and Safe. Retirement of a Spanish bull fighter at the age of 34 years with a fortune of $600,000 after 15 years in the arena is a satisfactory demonstration that it is a lucrative as well as a safe business in Spain. Out at the Chicago stock yards, a man works a whole lot harder than that for a mere living and an occasional evening at the movies.—Grafton Sentinel.

Both Undesirable.

The newspaper reports from Washington continue to indicate that the administration is disposed to try one or the other of two undesirable ways out of the Mexican maze. The granting of a degree of recognition to the Carranzistas and allowing them to procure munitions of war in this country is one suggestion; and the other is a scheme of joint intervention—armed intervention, apparently—with certain European powers, for the pacification of Mexico and the establishment of a constitutional government under a joint protectorate.—Morgantown Post-Chronicle.

BROWN

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

BROWN, Oct. 23.—Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Martin, of Shinn's run, gave a birthday party Saturday night in honor of their daughter, Leaty Beatrice. Miss Martin received several nice presents. SALT IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

Flush the Kidneys at Once When Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatisms, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.—Advertisement.

A Marvelous Escape.

"My little boy had a marvelous escape," writes P. F. Bastians of Prince Albert, Cape of Good Hope. "It occurred in the middle of the night. He got a very severe attack of croup. As luck would have it, I had a large bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. After following the directions for an hour and twenty minutes he was through all danger." Sold by all dealers.—Advertisement.
